Ancient College.

WILLIAMSBURG, V.A., May 15.—The following were the remarks of Dr. George C. Batcheller at the opening exercises of the hew library building of William and Mary College on May 14, 1909. Dr. Batcheller is a prominent work and any property of the support of the new library.

Woung Gentlemen of William and Mary College:

In April last year, by the kind invitation of President Tyler, I was an eyewitness to the laying of the corperstone of your new library, just one year ago.

Governor Swanson, Hon. R. T. W. Duké, Dr. J. W. Eggleston, grand muster of Masons, and other distinguished gending of your new library.

It is a very great source of pleasure to me to be here at this time to witness the opening of your new library in the core manes the orator of the Memphis reunion General Theodore S. Garnett, of Norfolk, Va. As an officer on the safety trying encounters and hair-breadth escapes, and this will ender him to all confederates. His wonderful oratorical ability has been shown on microus occasions to the delight of thousands, and this is a guarantee that his oration at this time will hold the attention of his old comrades, in order that there may be little interruption.

The world.

Young gentlemen, you must appreciate where we are gathered to-day—that Williamsburg was once the seaf of the colonial capital of Virginia, and seas the cradle of the founders of this great republic.

This was the first college under rowal chair received its coal of arms from the College and was the only one that received its coal of arms from the College of Heralds in London.

There has been graduated from this seat of learning America's most distinguished statesmen.

It is my belief that the usefulness of this institution is in the fore. Its glories of the past are written in history, but I believe in the future it will graduate young men who will become as conspicuous as Jegerson, Washington, Marshall and others I might mention.
